HONGRONG, FEBRUARY 23nd, 1871. AFFARES in the interior of the country seem by last accounts to be somewhat brightening. The Imperialists have obtained some successes over the Rebels in the North West, and have also succeeded in regaining possession of an important city in Kwei-chow. Of course the best is made of these successes in the native accounts. There is constant talk of their again establishing their authority in Yunnan; but year after year rolls on, and that province continues to be entirely independent of the Imperial authority; while it exercises great influence upon the risings in the adjacent province of Kweichow, as well as in Honan, and in the North West. Ir is impossible not to be struck by the extraordinary care that is taken by the Government of this Colony to prevent facts of an uppleasant nature leaking out... The instinct of every department is towards secrecy. The moment an abuse becomes apparent, the great object of every body connected with the Government seems to be to divert public "attention from it, instead of bringing it forward, and, by courting free discussion, obtaining the advantage of any suggestions or arguments which it may be in the power of the residents to advance. The movements which were given from the Twelfth Mass formed the nucleus of the programme. The opening solo of the Kyrie was given with dignity, and the barmony was well filledin in auccession by the teners and the altos and sopranos in unison. The two latter then spread over the harmony effectively, and the first portion went on very charmingly but for a slight weakness in the ranks of the trebles. The "Christe eleison" was necessarily bald of the movement, but the striking unisons leading with a base solo reporting the phrase into the interesti g and complicate ed descending sequences were very telling. The latter were a little slinky, but the re-introduction of the first subject was indiciously effected and had a very happy result, In the Gloria the trebles, who were weak previously, came out with capital effect and excellently in tune on the long and trying enclained G. "Pax hominibus" was very beantifully done, though again one missed the orchestra. The only defect in this movement was in the accented chords after the crescendo passages. The crescondo itself wer carefully managed, and excellent preparation was made for the crash, which however, did not come. The "Qui Tollis" was pathetically given, the solos being very sweet, and the concluding "miserers nobis," with the remarkable progression from the sub-dominant chord to the pianissimo discord and its peculiar gesolution, was extremely beautiful. The Quonism". was unfortunately omitted, and the next movement given was the "Credo," which was followed by the "Et resurrexit." The latter was very effective, and the accompaniment, which was throughout most efficient, was especially noticeable here from the magni-Pollico, the taleuted conductor, the Ohoral latter, notwithstanding the difficulties with

JARRAH TIMBER. (Illustrated Australian News, January 2nd)

A great deal of discussion has taken place during the last twelve months relative to the durability of the jarrah timber of Western Australia; but, until the present time, no positive proof has been given to residents in Melbourne of its good qualities. There are, however, at present on view at the Flindersstreet station of the M and H. B. Railway Company, three logs of jarrah timber which have, for the last thirty years, formed a portionof the jetty at Porth, Swan River, Western Australia. They have been drawn by the Government and forwarded to Melbourne with a view of exhibiting the capabilities of this wood. The logs are about twenty feet in length with a diameter of about twelve inches, and, baving bren sawn down the full length and polished exhibit the splendid grain of the wood to great advantage. paid to the tutelary divinity of the kitchen, who is represented in most cases by a little clay Hongkong Distillery Company—10 per cent. image, not infrequently by a rough sketch past-premium, nominal. ed against the wall. This rite is performed on the 23rd day of the month, and consists in first washing or cleaning bis godship from the annual accumulation of soot, and then burning incense to and making genuflexions before him. He is supposed to proceed afterwards to heaven, and report at the Council of the lesser gods an account of the good and evil deeds done by the family during the preceding year. He must either be a wilfully blind little imp, or he must carry a heavy tally of peccadilloes with him on his mission, if all be time that we are told of the greater susceptibility of the Chinese to certain sins. It is curious however that they should select the

A third duty counits in pulling down and washing off all the old paper scolls, charms, &c., which are pasted about the doors, windows and other prominent parts of the house and replacing these with fresh slips. All farming implements, furniture, shop necessaries, boats, carts, barrows, and everything indeed on which the protection and aid of the gods for the coming year is desired, are newly decorated with the word "luck" or "happiness." This custom busily earning their temporary living by writ ing scrolls and slips at little tables on the road side. The ten gurdens in the city are a favorite resort for these culigraphists. There are other observances than the above, and they differ more or less according to the from this date. locality, but space will not admit of a description of every one. Suffice it to say that a

The retail houses overflow with oustomers, as it is an object with sellers to clear off their goods as quickly as possible, and with from this date. purchasers to supply their wants at an unusually moderate rate. The quantity of money that circulates in consequence as the year wance, must be enormous, and in many cases shops are kept open until late at the closing THE Partnership hitherto existing between fearful lest the new year should dawn upon in the firm ceased. leaving town with their purchases for village firm in liquidation. bomes, while thousands are arriving from the Mr. H. J. Hunn will sign Aur & Co. in li-country to visit their city friends. As the night quidation, per procuration, at Nagasaki. of new year's eve draws on, the bustle and flurry are vastly increased. The various temples are quidation, per procuration, at Hiogo, Osaka. now the point of general attraction. Everybody is hastening to his or her favourite shrine to propitiste the gods for future favours and enquire for the luck of the coming year. Towards 2 or 3 a.m. the temples present a remarkable appearance. Cesseless strings of men and women pour in, place their sticks of incense in the censers, fire their bundle gain, all in solemn silence, the atmosphere all tolors. the while heavy-laden with the smoke and odours of the crackers exploded, and the incense consumed. This goes on unremittingly until daylight, when the new year is supposed to have dawned upon the world. Every shop is then closely shut, the streets are described, and porfect quiet and silence—the more marked as contrasted with the noise and rush of the day previous—seem to take possession of the entire city. The payement of the streets is crimson with the remains of firecruckers exploded during the night, and the only living beings observeable are hucksters of fruits and sweets, well dressed boys, playing about their parents' doors, groups of ill-clad gamblers busy clicating limited extent, towards the alternoon, and increases gradually during the five or ex days following, and it is not until after some ten days that the city returns to its normal condition of business and bustle. The above affords a very cursory sketch of some of the characteristics of the Chinese new year's day. It is a sacred season with the people, and no inducement will prevail with them to omit any of the cremonials which egstom has prescribed for its proper observance. In 1850 the Emperor Tau-kwang, thought fit to decree that the day, should be kept 24 hours earlier, owing to the unlucky coincidence of an eclipse of the sun with the new year proper, the 21st February." But the modification was received with anything but favour, the Blianghai people going so fur as to tear the edict diff the walls when it was exhibited here. The unfortunate monarch breathed his last within the first fortnight of the year so infelicitously commenced, and the iden was very general that the influence of the contretemps brought about deimist.

The Royal Marriage, the Court Journal says, LYALL & Co. will take place early in March. It is eaid that Mr. Sondamore has at the Post Office a new telegraphic instrument, by which he reckons that he sends messages at the rate of sixty words per minute, This instrument is to be tried at the Houses of Parliament at the opening of the session, in transmitting the ammary of the proceedings in both Houses to the provincial daily papers (Daily News, Dec. 21.) Yesterday the largest of the Hanover-square stone, but only by a wood partition. The Concert Rooms was filled to its utmost extent spirit of enlightened and liberal Catholicity with a fashionable audience, to hear from Pere Hynointhe an address on the war between France and Germany. Judging from the numiers that thronged the entrance even at three o'clock, for which hour the address was announced, many must have been unable to obtain and moval soul; she would be a powerful foous Roccess to the room. The Unke and Duchess of of civilization in the heart of Europe-pacific Argyll and one of his grace's daughters had and liberal. France would be restored to

Pere Hyscinthe entered the room about a revolution accomplished, and the reign of ing Marine Risks at the Current Rates, quarter-past three, and was received with some sophists and courtesans abolished. In my conapplause. He was dressed in a black frock cont ferences at Notre Dame, in the Advent of 1867, and sait, and wore nothing to indicate that he long before the war, I said:—"But I wish belonged to any special order in the Church, or above all things to expose evils which people was indeed a minister of the Church at all. He are anxious to conceal. Yes, whilst luxury is is rather under the middle size and of middle eating into the entrails of the nation, whilst in is rather under the middle size and of middle eating into the entraits of the nation, whilst in the midst of this growing decay courtesans are dark and penetrating eyes, and a charming lifting their proud heads like worms on the corruption. And further, I with his eyes in the more emotional parts, whilst the arms and the inflections of the voice give inculted, our independence measced—if this be accentuation to the stronger passages of the address. He stood erect and silent for some moments before his desk without uttering a loves us and wishes to save us in spite of ourword, whilst his eyes seemed to take in the selves. Come forth from the scabbard, sword entire andience. He begun by observing that of the Lord, and of France," I concluded, "do Europe had, for the last five months, been a thy work, do it quickly, and do it completely." witness of one of the sorest enlamities There were three good results which the hand of modern times, and every true friend of of God might draw from this wicked war-a humanity, all sincers disciples of the Gospel, P werful centre of civilization in Germany, NORTH BRITISH AND MEROANTILE have been asking each other with anxiety what | which would be pacific and liberal; France re-religiously was there any solid foundation for had he seen that power close at hand; thrice Above 6 months the full annual rate. the necessity of a lasting conflict between had he laboured to respect it-but he saw ab-France and Germany. Politically it was said that this was a war of races. He did not deny France, and when they were withdrawn it would the doctrine of races, or that particular modes of physical and moral life of man were deternined by blood and language. Race was the family aggrandised, and however much the word had been abused, there was historical evidence of an alliance between God and particular races of mankind. But there were two conceptions of the idea-the Pagan Conception and in the course of his address, the proceeds of the Christian Conception. The intique idea was one of isolation and separation. One race regarded itself as superior and others as inferior, and the sentiment resulted in the elevaenslavement of the others. But Obristianity introduced another conception of race, and now people view each other, not as enemies, or even as strangers, but as members of the same. human family—the family of Adam and of Jesus Christ. Having but one Father, who was in Heaven, the different races of man were destimed to consider themselves as fraternal branches of the same family, and to come near to each other in the observation of the same laws. Whether the human race was absolutely one in its origin was in this respect of no mo-ment. If, as was alleged, there had been several sources, he might not believe it; but he did not fear it. If mankind had not sprung from the heart of a single Adam, they had certainly sprung from the heart of the One Father. Let us hear no more, then, of the antagonism of races. But there were persons in France, and some of them men of eminence, who considered that the unity of Germany would be a humiliation or a menaco for France. I deny both positions If the Government of France had abstained from interfering in the internal ufficire of Germany-if it had abandoned the ides of acquiring what it colled its natural frontiers, there would have been no tear of aggression or invasion. We had no interest, no right in preventing the unity of Germany. The ap aker here proceeded to show that the unity of Germany was promoted by the policy of the Empire in advocating the unity of Italy, and he rendered justice to it for what it had done nuity of Italy were results that existed in the force of things, and could not be resisted. But ---- dynastic influences and the internal stute of the Empire forced the Emperor to yield to the prejudices of certain statesmen and publicists, and to the passions of the people. On the other hand, as little interest or right had Germany in opposing the greatness of France, as France in opposing the greatness of France as France in opposing the unity of Germany. Yet Germany would seem to have adopted towards France after the disaster of Sedan, a policy as blind and as oriminal as that which France practised towards Germany. Even the anuibilation of France would be but temporary. France would rise from her miefortunes like Prussia herself after Jena. A new France would start from Schun, and were Paris even in ashes it would have vengeance, for its soul. and aspiration, and the end of the century would behold even more bloody scenes L. occupied by Dr. MURRAY. centre of Europe a source of intelligence and civilization, but there was danger that if it gave itself up to warlike traditions, the French Empire of the 2nd of December would be followed by the German Empire of the 10th of December. As to the possession of Alsace and Lorrline, he regarded that as a secondary question. Hadid not think the possession of one or two provinces more necessary to the greatness of France, though he did not wish they should he lost to France. Some of his countrymen had gone so far as to say that if Alsace and Lorraine were lost, France would descend to the rank of a second-rate or thirdrate Power. So thought England when she lost Calvis; but what Englishman now regretted that Calais formed a portion of France? The

As to the religious aspect, the Pere Hyacinthe maintained that there was as little necessary antagonism in the question of religions as in politics. The time of religious wars had huppily passed away. A war of religion would be an anachronism and an impossibility. It was rather a time of approachment and fusion. It was not a period of religious indifference, but, as the Abbe de Lamennais had stated, of great sincerity and deep religious feeling. He did deny that there was doubt, real, sincere, profound, but it was not the doubt that laughed and ested as in the time of Voltaire, but a doubt that reasoned and inquired. The true principle of the mutual advances of the enlightenes members of the different Churches towards each other was not indifference, nor yet was it the desire of reducing all under the same form of doctrine and organization. It was the conviction that no single Church had attained to an adequate expression of the whole truth. In former times every Church elike-the Churches of their Protestant fathers and of his Outholio existed in the Apostolic age. This illusion had Apply to now almost universally passed away from the educated members of all Oburches equally. If 2192
